START ADVANCES UPON RIGA

New Offensive Seeks Capture of Commercial Metropolis on the Upper Dvina. Russians Admit Fierce Fighting Is Raging All Along Line.

By Associated Press.

LONDON, July 17.—A German offensive of huge proportions with Riga as great Russian seaport and the seat of the government control of the Baltic provinces as the objective is revealed in the latest official statements issued at Petrograd and Berlin. Military experts here contend the offensive to be the next development in which the Germans are making a herculean effort to destroy the Russian army.

Both the German and Russian communiques admit that the German forces north of the Windau river near Goldingen, which is only 50 miles from Riga, the great strategic commercial center on the Gulf of Riga and in the upper Baltic.

An official statement received this morning from Petrograd adds details of sanguinary fighting all along the new line in efforts to hold back the German advance which now is said to concentrate on Riga and on Warsaw, while the Austro-Hungarians are moving northward from the Dniester river.

Advices reaching London today say that the Germans left a trail of dead along the Baltic sea from Memel to Libau where the villas, hotels and casino, all said to have been deserted at the only exception pictured thus far, the fate of English children whose cousin married an American woman. The palace now being used as military headquarters in which Prince Henry of Prussia and Field Marshal von Hindenburg recently conferred on the new offensive towards Riga.

Crown Prince Frederick Williams drive in the Argonne forest was resumed in an all-night session lasting a few hundred yards of trench but no infantry attacking thereof by either side have yet taken place.

The count-attitude adopted by the Welsh miners in a session up prehensive. The miners now have increased their demands by asking the government to withdraw the royal proclamation making the coal mines subject to the munitions act.

GERMAN SUBMARINE ATTACKS ORDUNA; AMERICANS ABOARD

Shells Cunarder When Torpedo Misses Vessel's Stern By a Narrow Margin.

By Associated Press.

NEW YORK July 17. Passengers aboard the British steamship Orduna which reached here today said that a submarine attempted to torpedo the vessel at o'clock in the morning of July and failing, in its effort fired shells at the steamer, none of which took effect.

Few passengers were on deck when the attack occurred. Baron Ludwig Reventlow of Denmark one of the passengers reached the deck as the torpedo was speeding from her assailant and witnessed the attack. He said he thought that the steamer must have been struck by the torpedo.

There were 21 Americans aboard the Orduna it was said when she docked here. Passengers say the submarine attack was made without previous warning.

Ten minutes before the attack a sailing ship with the American flag painted on its side was sighted. Captain Turner at once suspicioned this craft and began maneuvers to keep his ship. Then came the first warning of what was the start of a fierce fight while the submarine was under the water and those on the Orduna stood by ready for what might follow. Several shots were fired by the submarine.

FIREWORKS DISPLAY

Italians Put Off Sky and eSt Pieces on the West Side.

Large crowds attended the fireworks display given by the Italians on the West Side last night in celebration of the feast of Our Lady of Mount Carmel. There were both sky and set pieces.

The display was free, there being no field in the city where the fireworks could be put off behind a fence. The Italians did not want to charge admission this year because they were not able to buy the elaborate fireworks they have shown in the past on account of all funds being needed for building of their new church on the West Side.

During the day the Italian Band paraded the streets and gave several musical concerts. Music was also furnished at the field.

How, and Why,
—the GOODRICH "Fair-List" Propaganda now saves Car-Owners, yearly, over $25,000,000 on Tires

THERE are 1,923,951 Automobiles now State-licensed, and running, in the United States.

Of these, 1,803,951 are Pleasure Cars—i.e., exclusive of Trucks, etc.

More than 90% of them, or about 1,623,555, use Pneumatic Tires.

Each car will wear out and replace, on average, about one Set of Four Tires per year.

Therefore, the interests of each Car-Owner as well as each Car-Manufacturer, each Car-Dealer, and Salesman, is vitally and personally affected by the price of Tires to Consumers.

Because,—Tires and Gasoline are the two big items of consumption in the operation of Motor Cars.

The Owner who used his Car 1,000 Miles less per year, than he would have done, because of "the high-price of Tires and Gasoline," received that much less return from his entire investment in the Car proper.

The potential, or prospective, Car-Owner who fails to buy a Car because of "the high cost of Tires and Gasoline,"—he who sells his Car and does not buy again because of "the high cost of Tires and Gasoline"—or he who, for the same reason, stores his Car and does not run it during a considerable part of the year, is a direct loss to —1st—Automobile Manufacturers, as a class.

—2d —Automobile Dealers, as a class.
—3d —Garage Owners, as a class.
—4th—Lubrication & Gasoline Manufacturers, as a class.

But,—he is a greater loss to TIRE Manufacturers, and Dealers, as a class, than to any others.

Because,—

—Gasoline and Lubricants, for instance, can be sold to the Owners of Motor Boats, Stationary, and other Motors.

But,—Automobile Tires can only be sold, in the ultimate, to the man who OWNS a Car, and who wears out Tires through using it.

o o o

EVERY mile that each Automobile runs, means an automatic Sale of Tires to replace that mileage with new Tires.

But, all the Salesmanship, and all the Advertising, under the Sun, could not increase, by a single Tire, the total sales of Tires beyond the number of Cars owned by Consumers, and the number of Miles each Consumer runs his Car yearly.

The Market for Tires is therefore limited inflexibly, to the number of Cars running, and the Mileage which each Owner is induced to run yearly.

Therefore, we opine that to promote greater Sales, and greater use, of Automobiles, few better incentives can be offered than markedly-lowered cost, TO CONSUMERS, for Tires and Gasoline.

Just as we recognize that the only legitimate expansion open to the Tire Industry, as a whole, would be due to the Sale of more Automobiles each year to Consumers, with a greater average Mileage USE, per year, of each Car by each Owner.

That is why we favor the lowest possible price for Tires,—to Consumers, consistent with maintenance of high quality and a fair profit to Dealer and Mfr.

So this, then, is a leading reason why WE initiated, and propagated, that Goodrich "Fair-List" Movement which we publicly announced in the press on Jan. 31, 1915, and which caused practically every Pneumatic Tire Manufacturer in this Country to follow our lead and bring his prices down to a fairer level.

o o o

THIS is also the reason why some Tire Manufacturers, who could not, or would not, "meet" our BASIC prices for Pneumatic Tires (even though our "Fair-List" Propaganda obliged them to make heavy reductions off their former Lists) might erroneously suppose that "Goodrich" Tires have been cheapened in Quality, as well as in price.

Hence this explanation (to the Public, to Car-Manufacturers, Dealers, Car-Salesmen, Garages, and Tire Dealers generally) that we deem it "good business" to sell the best Goodrich Tires (of fabric construction) we have ever made, at the fairest price possible for such quality.

Hence, too, the following TEST offer to Consumers.

—We will cheerfully pay for any Goodrich Safety "Non-Skid" Tire, sold since our "Fair-List" price-reduction (announced on January 31, 1915), which when cut open shows any reduction in quality, in number of layers of Canvas, in thickness, or quality of Rubber, when compared with any other Goodrich Safety "Non-Skid" made by us, and sold at our higher prices current before the Goodrich "Fair-List" Movement.

And,—this is further to authorize any Tire-User to extend this Offer (at our expense) to any Tire Dealer, or Manufacturer.

We ask Car-Owners, and Tire Consumers, in their own interest, to see that no "implication" of lowered quality in Goodrich Tires goes unchallenged—just as we have protected their interests, for our own sake, through our "Fair-List" Propaganda.

o o o

BECAUSE of that GOODRICH "Fair-List" Propaganda, every Car-Owner who now buys any make of Tire sized 37 x 5, now saves on each set of 4 Tires, an average of about $46.27.

—Every Car-Owner who uses 34 x 4 Tires, of any make, now saves, through the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda an average of about $26.15 per Set of 4 Tires.

—Every Car-Owner who uses 30 x 3½ Tires, now saves, through the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda, an average of about $14.70 per Set of 4 Tires.

Other sizes in proportion.

The 1,623,555 State-licensed Car-Owners who use Pneumatic Tires now save about 20% of what they last year paid for ANY make and size, whether they be Goodrich or competing brands,—equal to more than $25,000,000 per year.

And, don't forget that this giant saving to Car-Owners was never mentioned to the Public by other Tire Manufacturing Concerns until the Goodrich "Fair-List" Propaganda made it imperative that they extend the Saving to Consumers on their Tires, or lose business to the Goodrich Co.

But, notwithstanding all this,—the fact which should loom largest to TIRE-USERS is the contrast of 10% to 40%, in prices, that still exists between the low price of the best Non-Skid Tires (of fabric construction) that money can buy, or the largest Rubber Factory in the World produce,—(to wit, GOODRICH Non-Skid Tires) and all other "responsible" Tires in the field.

Compare prices and see!

Then, if you are not already a Goodrich User, do yourself (and us), the justice to buy at least one GOODRICH "Non-Skid" Tire.

Test that out for Quality, Mileage and Resilience against any other Tire, at any price, which you are now using.

The result of such Test will cause you to wonder why you ever paid more for Maximum Quality, Mileage, and Resilience than the Basic price of Goodrich Non-Skid Tires?

THE B. F. GOODRICH CO., Akron, O.

Made as always——

—The same reliable Construction.

—The same, dependable, Service.

—Nothing whatever, taken out of materials or Quality, no matter what reductions in List-Price are ever made.

ROOM FOR ARGUMENT.

The manner in which Connellsville shall sell coke officers have arrived at another stage in the eventful career. The partisan ballot which was held to be the proper ballot in 1913, has been attacked in court by Uniontown candidates for Mayor. Uniontown having in the meantime followed the example of Connellsville and become a third class city.

Judge Van Swearingen who rendered the decision in the Connellsville case will be heard in the present proceedings which were brought before Judge Lopeer. If the latter should hold that the nonpartisan ballot is valid the question at issue under the Clark act will be no nearer final solution unless the County Commissioners should appeal in such decision which is not likely. If such is the case no interest in the matter ceases to be under authority of law.

The proceedings should have been brought before Judge Van Swearingen who would presumably affirm his own decision thus permitting the friends of the nonpartisan ballot to appeal the case promptly to the Supreme Court and get a decision thereon before the primary election which would overcome all doubt and settle all doubt about the matter.

If Judge Reppert shows the matter to the same light as Judge Van Swearingen did two years ago the same results will be obtained. In this connection the query arises how far the jurisdiction of a county court extends on judges of that court whether they are res judicata, or whether they are entitled to any respect whatever.

While the calling a new judge into the case seems rather unwise in that the circumstances there can be no doubt as to the propriety of the County Commissioners employing special counsel to argue the case. County Solicitor Hudson has given a very positive opinion in favor of the nonpartisan ballot. He can be expected to act against it after his public utterances in its favor. In order to have a fair decision on the question the arguments on both sides should be fairly presented.

And notwithstanding the exact manner in which the nonpartisan ballot law has been upheld by other judges, yet in spite of the small type given over to the Constitution in considering the question, there is room for argument.

THE INDUSTRIAL SITUATION

The Connellsville oven may not has increased to meet the increased demands of the iron business due to its rebuilding and increased business. The boom in pig iron has been long delayed but the furnace movement has begun and the coke outlook is of the best. We may expect increased prices for coke as output and increased prices have not yet materialized but they seem to be in the offing. In the meantime some of the trade journals are speculating about the fuel supply in case the mills furnace and mine are speeded up to capacity as has been predicted. The American Metal Market for example says:

"Thus far there has been no confirmation of the predictions frequently made in recent months that the iron industry as a whole would encounter a labor shortage before long. The only cases of development have been the reported need of the Lake ore trade and the Connellsville coke region and there is no sure indication for it would disappoint anybody that furnaces and coke ovens should be operating to nearly the full extent of their capacity. The fact that the furnaces and coke ovens are not all the maximum would not be any more

Herbert Rawlinson and Anna Little are the star features in the two reel Lectrmile feature, "The Grail." It is a pics full of interest. The Powers present a Vaudeville feature, "The Cameron Sisters and the Miniature Circus." It is simply great. The Nestor comedy, "A Peach and a Pair," is a humorous play with comedy side-lights. Monday the funny comedian, Charles Chaplin will appear in a joyous farce, "A Gentleman of Nerve." Also the 1st episode of "The Black Box."

HOLBROOK BLINN AND ALICE BRADY IN "THE BOSS."

The World Film Corporation releases the five-part Wm. A. Brady photoplay "The Boss," based upon the successful play of the same name, at the Soisson today. Alice Brady and Holbrook Blinn are starred in the production.

Michael Regan is of Irish descent and a born fighter. This fighting instinct helps Regan to success. He becomes first of all, a bartender, then a saloon proprietor. Two of his best friends are Sullivan and McCoy. They have been boys together. Sullivan becomes a priest, and Percy McCoy becomes Regan's right hand man.

Regan goes in for politics. He also buys up mortgages. His power increases as his field of labor widens. He begins to gain the monopoly of the grain-shipping contracts which before his coming had been under the control of Griswold & Son, an old established firm. Old John Griswold and his son are on the brink of ruin.

Regan has two sides to his nature. The man of iron, hard, merciless and a grafter, and the man who feeds the starving would give his life for his friend and delight in the smile of a child. While visiting and helping the poor, he meets and loves Emily Griswold. In his third fighting life he has been ill of women and Emily becomes his ideal.

When the situation of the Griswolds becomes desperate, they ask Regan to visit them. He come and offers them relief, through an examination of interests. When questioned as to his reason for his leniency, when he has everything in his power, he tells them he wishes to try and win Emily for his wife.

Emily and Regan marry, but her brother, full of hatred for Regan, becomes an agitator, and runs on the men to strike against his brother-in-law, Regan. Things become really serious now for Regan. Scanlan, the workman's delegate, comes to Regan and lays down the terms that young Griswold has dictated to them. When Regan laughs and defies them Scanlan becomes abusive. Regan strikes him and he falls. Regan in prison. McCoy comes to him and says his wife insists that he give himself up. Regan will not hear of this, and sends him home. But McCoy goes straight to the judges and makes affidavit that proves Regan innocent. Emily comes to visit her husband. He gives into her hands the mortgages of all the property, to do as she likes with. But in Emily's heart a deep love has grown for her husband and before they leave the prison for home Regan has learned that Emily is his entirely. Regan and his wife never forget the devotion of the faithful McCoy and are last seen as Godfather and Godmother to his son and heir.

"THE CAPTIVE."

Blanche Sweet in "The Captive" is a love drama of unusual quality, the incidents of which all take place during the recent Balkan conflict between Turkey and Montenegro. It is the story of an aversion that turns into love; the narrative of a romance which begins with hate, seeming to justify the assertion that anything is better than indifference.

The two principal characters in "The Captive" are a Montenegrin peasant girl and a Turkish noble, who is made a prisoner of war and rendered to the peasant to do the work on her farm and who in the end saves her from the Turkish marauders. The leading male role is played by Horace Peters, who was also Miss Sweet's leading man in "The Warrens of Virginia." With this new part feature is the Paramount Travel Series which will be shown at the Colonial Theatre today, afternoon and night.

CRISP AND SMART THE COSTUME FOR RACE DAY.

Silk frocks of this type have been the favorites for wear at summer racing events and horseshows. Blue taffeta in combination with blue and white striped taffeta compose this exclusive little frock, which is as short as a frock should be this year, in order to make proper display of coquettish footwear. Parasol and hat are blue in the tone of the frock, but contrasting color is added in the neckbow and ornament of ribbon at the girdle, these are coral pink in tone with steel buckles.

Hugo and the Barber.

When Victor Hugo lived in Paris in the Place Royale he used to be shaved by a barber named Brassier. A friend of the poet asked the barber one day if he was busy. "I hardly know which way to turn," was the reply. "We have to dress the hair of thirty ladies for soirees and balls." And M. Brassier showed the list to his friend. A few days after the friend returned and inquired about the thirty ladies. "Ah, monsieur," said the barber sadly, "I was not able to attend half the number, and I have lost many good customers through M. Victor Hugo." It appears that the poet when about to be shaved was suddenly inspired and seized the first piece of paper he could find to write a poem. Hugo hastily left the shop with his unfinished verses, on the back of which were the names and addresses of the thirty ladies, many of whom waited in vain for their coiffeur.

Promoted.

"Mrs. Nutich, I understand your husband is one of the stewards of the racing association."

"Look here, young man, my husband gave up cookin' years ago and I'd rather you wouldn't refer to it."—Buffalo Express.

FRENCH SNEER AT HERO TALK

Soldiers Dislike Journalistic Pictures of Their Doings.

NO POSE IN THE TRENCHES.

Ridiculo Paris Newspapers Which Said the Germans Were Out of Ammunition and Laugh at Official Announcements From the War Offices—Suffer Because Enemy Is on French Soil.

Soldiers at the front have given up betting, speculating or prophesying as to the date the war will end. Last winter the end of May was the greatest favorite. Next came July 14 for a peaceful yet victorious national celebration, and the beginning of August for a complete year of war, says a correspondent on the French battle front.

Newspapers are still eagerly read, but the French press has lost its hold over the French soldier. "The Cossacks at Five Marches From Berlin," a heading that appeared in September, is remembered in the army with disdain, even if forgotten by the public.

Semi official announcement of German shortage of shells is not forgiven by those who daily receive a very fair and what they think sufficient dose of them. When the men are ordered to the cellars and shelters they never speak of bombardment, but always remark, "They are short of shells." Everybody knows what is meant.

The usual cheap stereotyped phrases about "our heroic soldiers" are resented, and men are "fed up" with nonsensical, fabricated accounts and portraits of ourselves and our doings. There is really no truth in the pictures drawn by journalistic grocers to please Parisian concierges. The French soldier at the front is totally different from, infinitely more lovable and human than the representations of him given by these admiring yet libelous worshipers.

Does Not Act the Hero.

He is a hero, but does not act the hero. He will stand the strain of this protracted war whether he is covered with praises or not. He is not fighting for praise or compliments or acclamation, but for his invaded country and for his ideal of a peace based on justice.

When the newspapers arrive they are read aloud to groups. The official bulletins are listened to in eager silence, but at the first mention of "our heroic poilus" a storm of angry "Oh! La barbe!" breaks out.

"Barbe" means beard, that which is shaved, and as the word for shave means also to bore to death, "la barbe" means "enough of that stale talk."

It sounds so insincere and insulting, for it seems as if it was heaped up and repeated for fear we should otherwise give way. It seems to smack of cowardice and want of tact. Do tell your American readers these pictures are overdrawn, without foundation or resemblance. Tell them the men are far more modest, human and sympathetic than is to be inferred from most newspapers. They do not act, they do not pose and are really quite unassuming.

The French army is an image of France as a whole and, what is best of it, not an image of what a few overanxious, hysterical admirers fondly imagine it to be.

Abashed at Their Heroism.

There is not only much heroism, but heroism so remarkable that it stands out, and those who witness it feel a kind of shame in speaking of it, coupled with the fear, nay, the certainty, of inability to do it justice.

"The most extraordinary, the most impressive figure that I have yet met with was also the most unassuming, gentle, modest man you could imagine," said the correspondent. "I will endeavor to depict him for you as he remains in my memory after three months' friendship. A lieutenant commanding a company; a prepossessing appearance; a real, thoroughbred Frenchman with fine, regular, well shaped southern features starred with beautiful, deep northern eyes; spotless in attire and passionately fond of his profession. Intensely French, love of France, its soil, its people, its traditions, its language was deeply rooted in him, the flame of patriotism burning white.

"The presence of the Germans in France really made him suffer. I remember going the round of the sentries with him one night. At an advanced post I had placed a double sentry in a bush. In front stood a tall ash tree, and the rising moon flung its shadow far out. He led the sentries to the far end of the tree's shadow and whispered to them to keep within it. Back in the trenches he said aloud but as if speaking to himself, 'This French tree hides in its shade our sentries, and as the moon rises they will be brought back covered in the dark shroud.'

"Three days before he was killed in action we were talking of the promise of spring, of a change from mud and dark sodden vistas. He murmured slowly, 'I should like to fall in an attack at sunrise, when the bayonets are gilded and shine out fiercely like gold, to die after having recovered some of our soil and lie down among the poppies, hyacinths and buttercups.' He fell before spring came with its flowers, but the bayonets glittered, and his eyes glistened with joy of battle."

POLAR POSTAGE.

Special Stamps Used by Some of the Exploring Expeditions.

Many arctic and antarctic explorers have taken with them a special supply of postage stamps for special uses. When the Terra Nova left New Zealand on Nov. 20, 1910, she had on board £100 worth of New Zealand penny stamps bearing the words "Victoria Land."

Captain Scott was made postmaster of British Antarctica, an appointment first held by Sir Ernest Shackleton in 1907.

The stamps carried by the Shackleton expedition were the ordinary New Zealand stamps, marked "King Edward VII. Land." Twenty-three thousand of these stamps were issued, and though of only a penny value they are now quoted at 26 shillings each, unused.

The Australian antarctic expedition, under the leadership of Dr. Mawson, used the stamps of Tasmania, canceled with a special postmark showing in the center the figure of a penguin. The stamps used by the Terra Nova expedition were also canceled by a design noticeable for the figure of a penguin.

The German antarctic expedition of 1911 had a stamp of special manufacture showing a design of the expedition's ship, the Deutschland.—Minneapolis Journal.

LIFE IN COLLEGE.

A Few Sarcastic Pointers on How to Write a Story About It.

Anybody can write a story about college life. If he has not attended a college so much the better; his imagination is less trammeled. A few simple rules must be observed, however:

First.—All heroes are named Jack, Stanley or Dick.

Second.—All college men wear sweaters always and smoke short, fat bowled pipes.

Third.—There is always a fatty, who is a funny fellow.

Fourth.—Any four college men make up a quartet, which can sing "Mer-hilleen We Re-hull Alonning" at any time.

Fifth.—All college men are wooing a girl named Dorothy or Betty, who is "sweet and pure as an angel."

Sixth.—All college men address one another as "old hoss."

Seventh.—College men never study, but spend their time in tossing repartee back and forth.

Eighth.—All college rooms are adorned with pennants.

Ninth.—All college men call their fathers "Pater" and speak of the "honor of the dear old school" in a husky voice.—Harvard Lampoon.

MESSIAH'S KINGDOM.

The Glorious Day of Divine Favor Is Nearing.

The period in which sin is permitted has been a dark night to humanity, never to be forgotten; but the glorious day of righteousness and divine favor is soon to be ushered in by Messiah. He, as the SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, shall arise and shine fully and clearly into and upon all, bringing healing and blessing, which will more than counterbalance the dreadful night of weeping, sighing, pain, sickness and death, in which the groaning creation has been so long. "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the MORNING."

"Why should I concern myself, specially?" he asked, adding: "Of course, I'm sorry, and all that, but—"

"Never mind," she interposed, and she left her chair to walk beside him to the steps. "I've had a hard day, too, Kenneth, boy, and I—I guess it has got on my nerves. But, all the same, you ought to do it, you know."

He stopped and looked down into the eyes whose depths he could never wholly fathom.

"Why don't you do it?" he demanded.

"I? oh, God doesn't know me; and, besides, I thought - oh, well, it doesn't matter what I thought. Good-night."

And before he could return the leave-taking word, she was gone.

Raymer's prediction that the real trouble would begin when the attempt should be made to start the plant with imported workmen was amply fulfilled during the militant week which followed the opening of hostilities. Each succeeding day saw the inevitable increase of lawlessness. From taunts and abuse the insurrectionaries passed easily to violence. Street fights, when the tramplish place-takers came in any considerable numbers, were of daily occurrence, and the tale of the wounded grew like the returns from a battle. By the middle of the week Raymer and Griswold were asking for a sheriff's posse to maintain peace in the neighborhood of the plant; and were getting their first definite hint that someone higher up was playing the game of politics against them.

"No, gentlemen; I've done all the law requires and a little more," was the sheriff's response to the plea for better protection.

"In other words, Mr. Bradford, you've got your orders from the men higher up, have you?" rasped Griswold, who was by this time lost to all sense of expediency.

"I don't have to reply to any such charge as that," said the chief peace officer, turning back to his desk; and so the brittle little conference ended.

"All of which means that we shall lose the plant guard of deputies that Bradford has been maintaining," commented Raymer, as they were descending the courthouse stairs; and again his prediction came true. Later in the day the guard was withdrawn; and Griswold, savagely reluctant, was forced to make a concession repeatedly urged and argued for by the older men among the strikers, namely, that the guarding of the company's property be entrusted to a picked squad of the ex-employees themselves.

During these days of turmoil and rioting the transformed idealist passed through many stages of the journey down a certain dark and mephitic valley not of amelioration. Fairness was gone, and in its place stood angry resentment, ready to rend and tear. Pity and truth were going; the daily report from Margery told of the lessening chance of life for Andrew Galbraith, and the strivings evoked were neither regretful nor compassionate. On the contrary, he knew very well that the news of Galbraith's death would be a relief for which, in his heart of hearts, he was secretly thirsting.

CHAPTER XXV.

Margery's Answer.

"Well, it has come at last," said Raymer next morning, passing a newly opened letter of the morning; delivery over to Griswold. "The railroad people are taking their work away from us. I've been looking for that in every mail."

Griswold glanced at the letter and handed it back. The burden was lying heavily upon him, and his only comment was a questioning, "Well?"

At this, Raymer let go again.

"What's the use?" he said dejectedly. "We're down, and everything we do merely prolongs the agony. Do you know that they tried to burn the plant last night?"

"No; I hadn't heard."

"They did. They had everything fixed; a pile of kindlings laid in the corner back of the machine shop annex and the whole thing saturated with kerosene."

"Well, why didn't they do it?" queried Griswold, half-heartedly. After the heavens have fallen, no mere terrestrial cataclysm can evoke a thrill.

"That's a mystery. Something happened; just what, the watchman who had the machine shop beat couldn't tell. He says there was a flash of light bright enough to blind him, and then a scrap of some kind. When he got out of the shop and around to the place, there was no one there; nothing but the pile of kindlings."

Griswold took up the letter from the railway people and read it again. When he faced it down on Raymer's desk, he had closed with the conclusion which had been thrusting itself upon him since the early morning hour when he had picked his way among the sidewalk pools to the plant from upper Shawnee street.

"You can still save yourself, Edward," he said, still with the colorless note in his voice. And he added, "You know the way."

Raymer jerked his head out of his desk and swung around in the pivot-chair.

"See here, Griswold; the less said about that at this stage of the game, the better it will be for both of us!" he exploded. "I'm going to do as I said I should, but not until this fight is settled, one way or the other!"

Griswold did not retort in kind.

"The condition has already expired by limitation; the fight is as good as settled now," he said, placably. "We are only making a hopeless bluff. We can hold our forty or fifty tramp workmen just as long as we pay their board over in town, and don't ask them to report for work. But the day the shop whistle is blown, four out of every five will vanish. We both know that."

"Then there is nothing for it but a receivership," was Raymer's gloomy decision.

"Not without a miracle," Griswold admitted. "And the day of miracles is past."

Thus the idealist, out of a depth of wretchedness and self-exprobration hitherto unplumbed. But if he could have had even a momentary gift of telepathic vision he might have seen a miracle at that moment in the preliminary stage of its outworking.

The time was half-past nine; the place a grottolike summer house on the Mereside lawn. The miracle workers were two: Margery Grierson, radiant in the daintiest of morning house gowns, and the man who had taken her retainer. Miss Grierson was curiously examining a photographic print; the pictured scene was a well-littered foundry yard with buildings forming an angle in the near background. Against the buildings a pile of shavings with kindlings showed quite clearly; and, stooping to ignite the pile, was a man who had evidently looked up at, or just before, the instant of camera-snapping. There was no mistaking the identity of the man. He had a round, pig-jowl face; his bristling mustaches stood out stiffly as if in sudden horror; and his hat was on the back of his head.

"It ain't very good," Broffin apologized. "The sun ain't high enough yet to make a clear print. But you said 'hurry,' and I reckon it will do."

Miss Grierson nodded. "You caught him in the very act, didn't you?" she said coolly. "What did he hope to accomplish by setting fire to the works?"

"It was a frameup to capture public sympathy. There's been a report circulating 'round that Raymer and Griswold was goin' to put some o' the ring leaders in jail, if they had to make a case against 'em. Clancy had it figured out that the fire'd be charged up to the owners, themselves."

Miss Grierson was still examining the picture. "You made two of these prints?" she asked.

"Yes; here's the other one—and the film."

"And you have the papers to make them effective?"

Broffin handed her a large envelope, unsealed. "You'll find 'em in there. That part of it was a cinch. Your governor ought to fire that man Murray. He was payin' Clancy in checks!"

Again Miss Grierson nodded.

"About the other matter?" she inquired. "Have you heard from your messenger?"

Broffin produced another envelope. It had been through the mails and bore the Duluth postmark.

"Affidavits was the best we could do there," he said. "My man worked it to go with MacFarland as the driver of the rig. They saw some mighty fine timber, but it happened to be on the wrong side of the St. Louis county line. He's a tolerably careful man, and he verified the landmarks."

"Affidavits will do," was the even-toned rejoinder. Then: "These papers are all in duplicate?"

"Everything in pairs—just as you ordered."

Miss Grierson took an embroidered chamois-skin money book from her bosom and began to open it. Broffin raised his hand.

"Not any more," he objected. "You overpaid me that first evening in front of the Winnebago."

"You needn't hesitate," she urged. "It's my own money."

"I've had a-plenty."

"Then I can only thank you," she said, rising.

He knew that he was being dismissed, but the one chance in a thousand had yet to be tested.

"Just a minute, Miss Grierson," he begged. "I've done you right in this business, haven't I?"

"You have."

"I said I didn't want any more money, and don't. But there's one other thing. Do you know what I'm here in this little jay town of yours for?"

"Yes; I have known it for a long time."

"I thought so. You knew it that day out at the De Soto, when you was tellin' Mr. Raymer a little story that was partly true and partly made up—what?"

"Every word of the story about Mr. Griswold—the story that you overheard, you know—was true; every single word of it. Do you suppose I should have dared to embroider it the least little bit—with you sitting right there at my back?"

Broffin got up and took a half-burned cigar from the ledge of the summer house where he had carefully laid it at the beginning of the interview.

"You've got me down," he confessed, with a good-natured grin. "The man that plays a winnin' hand against you has got to get up before sun in the morning and hold all trumps, Miss Grierson—to say nothin' of being a mighty good bluffer, on the side." Then he switched suddenly. "How's Mr. Galbraith this morning?"

"He is very low, but he is conscious again. He has asked us to wire for the cashier of his bank to come up."

Broffin's eyes narrowed.

"The cashier is sick and can't come," he said.

"Well, someone in authority will come, I suppose."

Once more Broffin was thinking in terms of speed. Johnson, the paying teller, was next in rank to the cashier. If he should be the one to come to Wahaska. . . .

"If you haven't anything else for me to do, I reckon I'll be going," he said, hastily, and forthwith made his escape. The telegraph office was a good ten minutes' walk from the lake front, and in the light of what Miss Grierson had just told him, the minutes were precious.

Something less than a half-hour after Broffin's hurried departure, Miss Grierson drove by quicker thoroughfares into the street upon which the Raymer property fronted. Smoke was pouring from the tall central stack of the plant, and it had evidently provoked a sudden and wrathful gathering of the clans. The sidewalks were filled with angry workmen, and an excited argument was going forward at one of the barred gates between the locked-out men and a watchman inside of the yard.

The crowd let the trap pass without hindrance. Though it was the first time she had been in the new offices, she seemed to know where to find what she sought; and when Raymer took his face out of his desk, she was standing on the threshold of the open door and smiling across at him.

"May I come in?" she asked; and when he fairly bubbled over in the effort to make her understand how welcome she was: "No; I mustn't sit down, because if I do, I shall stay too long—and this is a business call. Where is Mr. Griswold?"

"He went up town a little while ago, and I wish to goodness he'd come back."

"You have been having a great deal of trouble, haven't you?" she said, sympathetically. "I'm sorry, and I've come to help you cure it."

Raymer shook his head despondently.

"I'm afraid it has gone past the curing point," he said.

"Oh, no, it hasn't. I have discovered the remedy and I've brought it with me." She took a sealed envelope from the inside pocket of her driving coat and laid it on the desk before him. "I'm going to ask you to lock that up in your office safe for a little while just as it is," she went on. "If there are no signs of improvement in the sick situation by three o'clock, you are to open it—you and Mr. Griswold—and read the contents. Then you will know exactly what to do, and how to go about it."

Her lips were trembling when she got through, and he saw it. She was going then, but as he got before her and shut the door and put his back against it.

"I don't know what you have done, but I can guess," he said, lost now to everything save the intoxicating joy of the barrier-breakers. "You have a heart of gold, Margery, and I—"

"Please don't," she said, trying to stop him; but he would not listen.

"No; before that envelope is opened, before I can possibly know what it contains, I'm going to ask you one question in spite of your prohibition; and I'm going to ask it now because, afterward, I may not—you may not—that is, perhaps it won't be possible for me to ask, or for you to listen. I love you, Margery; I—"

She was looking up at him with the faintest shadow of a smile lurking in the depths of the alluring eyes. And her lips were no longer tremulous when she said: "Oh, no, you don't. If I were as mean as some people think I am, I might take advantage of all this, mightn't I? But I sha'n't. Won't you open the door and let me go? It is very important."

"Heavens, Margery! Don't make a joke of it!" he burst out. "Can't you see that I mean it? Girl, girl, I want you—I need you!"

This time she laughed outright. Then she grew suddenly grave.

"My dear friend, you don't know what you are saying. The gate that you are trying to break down opens upon nothing but misery and wretchedness. If I loved you as a woman ought to love her lover, for your sake and for my own I should still say no—a thousand times no! Now will you open the door and let me go?"

He opened the door and she slipped past him. But in the corridor she turned and laughed at him again.

"I am going to cure you—you, personally, as well as the sick situation—Mr. Raymer," she said flippantly. Then, mimicking him as a spoiled child might have done: "I might possibly learn to—think of you—in that way—after a while. But I could never, never, never learn to love your mother and your sister."

And with that spiteful thrust she left him.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The Gray Wolf.

As it chanced, Jasper Grierson was in the act of concluding a long and apparently satisfactory telephone conversation with his agent in Duluth at the moment when the door of his private room opened and his daughter entered.

He hung the receiver on its hook and was pushing the bracketed telephone set aside when Margery crossed the room swiftly and placed an envelope, the counterpart of the one left with Raymer, on the desk.

"There is your notice to quit," she said calmly. "You threw me down and gave me the double-cross the other day, and now I've come back at you."

Another man might have hastened to meet the crisis. But the gray wolf was of a different mettle. He let the envelope lie untouched until after he had pulled out a drawer in the desk, found his box of cigars, and had leisurely selected and lighted one of the fat black monstrosities. When he tore the envelope across, the photographic print fell out, and he studied it carefully for many seconds before he read the accompanying documents. For a little time after he had tossed the papers aside there was a silence that bit. Then, he said, slowly:

"So that's your raise, is it? Where does the game stand, right now?"

"You stand to lose."

Again the biting silence; and then: "You don't think I'm fool enough to give you back your ammunition so that you can use it on me, do you?"

"Those papers and that picture are copies; the originals are in a sealed envelope in Mr. Raymer's safe. If you haven't taken your hands off of Mr. Raymer's throat by three o'clock this afternoon, the envelope will be opened."

Jasper Grierson's teeth met in the marrow of the fat cigar. Equally without heat and without restraint, he stripped her of all that was womanly, pouring out upon her a flood of foul epithets and vile names garnished with bitter, brutal oaths. She shrank from the crude and savage upbraidings as if the words had been hot irons to touch the bare flesh, but at the end of it she was still facing him hardily.

"Calling me bad names doesn't change anything," she pointed out, and her tone reflected something of his own elemental contempt for the euphemisms. "You have five hours in which to make Mr. Raymer understand that you have stopped trying to smash him. Wouldn't it be better to begin on that? You can curse me out any time, you know."

Jasper Grierson's rage fit, or the mud-volcano manifestation of it, passed as suddenly as it had broken out. Swinging heavily in his chair he took up the papers again, reread them thoughtfully, and then swung slowly to face the situation.

"Let's see what you want—show us your hand."

"I have shown it. Take the prop of your backing from behind this labor trouble, and let Mr. Raymer settle with his men on a basis of good-will and fair dealing."

"Is that all?"

"No. You must cancel this timberland deal. You have broken bread with Mr. Galbraith as a friend, and I'm not going to let you be worse than an Arab."

Grierson's shaggy brows met in a reflective frown, and when he spoke the bestial temper was rising again.

"When this is all over and you've gone to live with Raymer, I'll kill him," he said, with an outthrust of the hard jaw; adding: "You know me, Madge."

"I thought I did," was the swift retort. "But it was a mistake. And as for taking it out on Mr. Raymer, you'd better wait until I go 'to live with him,' as you put it. Besides, this isn't Yellow Dog gulch. They hang people here."

"You little she-devil! If you push me into this thing, you'd better get Raymer, or somebody, to take you in. You'll be out in the street!"

"I have thought of that, too," she said, coolly; "about quitting you. I'm sick of it all—the getting and the spending and the crookedness. I'd put the money—yours and mine—in a pile and set fire to it, if some decent man would give me a calico dress and a chance to cook for two."

"Raymer, for instance?" the father cut in, in heavy mockery.

"Mr. Raymer has asked me to marry him, if you care to know," she struck back.

"Oho! So that's the milk in the cocoanut, is it? You sold me out to buy in with him!"

"You may put it that way, if you like; I don't care." She was drawing on her driving gloves methodically and working the fingers into place, and there were sullen fires in the brooding eyes.

"I've been thinking it was the other one—the book writer," said the father. Then, without warning: "He's a damned crook."

The daughter went on smoothing the wrinkles out of the fingers of her gloves. "What makes you think so?" she inquired, with indifference, real or skillfully assumed.

"He's got too much money to be straight. I've been keeping cases on him."

"Never mind Mr. Griswold," she interposed. "He is my friend, and I suppose that is enough to make you hate him. About this other matter—ten minutes before three o'clock this afternoon I shall go back to Mr. Raymer. If he tells me that his troubles are straightening themselves out, I'll get the papers."

"You'll bring 'em here to me?"

"Some day; after I'm sure that you have broken off the deal with Mr. Galbraith."

Jasper Grierson let his daughter get as far as the door before he stopped her with a blunt-pointed arrow of contempt.

"I suppose you've fixed it up to marry that college-sharp dub so that his mother and sister can rub it into you right?" he sneered.

"You can suppose again," she returned, shortly. "If I should marry him, it would be out of pure spite to those women. Because, when he asked me, I told him No. You weren't counting on that, were you?" And having fired this final shot of contradiction she departed.

After Miss Grierson had driven home from the bank between ten and eleven in the morning, an admiring public saw her no more until just before bank-closing hours in the afternoon. As she passed in the basket phaeton between half-past two and three through the overcrossing suburb there were signs of an armistice apparent, even before the battlefield was reached. Pottery Flat was populated again, and the groups of men bunched on the street corners arguing peacefully. Miss Grierson pulled up at one of the corners and beckoned to a young iron-molder.

"Anything new, Malcolm?" she asked.

"You bet your sweet life!" said the young molder, meeting her, as most men did, on a plane of perfect equality and frankness. "We was hoodooed to beat the band, and Mr. Raymer's got us, comin' and goin'. There wasn't no orders from the big federation, at all, and that crooked guy, Clancy, was a fake!"

"He has gone?" she said.

"He'd better be. If he shows himself 'round here again, there's goin' to be a mix-up."

Miss Grierson drove on, and at the iron works there were more of the peaceful indications. The gates were open, and a switching engine from the railroad yards was pushing in a carload of furnace coal. By all the signs the trouble flood was abating.

WHEELER GETS REVENGE

Defeats Dunbar by Overwhelming Score of 13-3; Swope Pitches.

The Wheeler ball team played its first real game of the season when it defeated the fast Dunbar aggregation on the Wheeler grounds by the overwhelming score of 13 to 3. Wheeler was out for revenge and upheld Swope with excellent fielding.

The only time Swope loosened up was when he let Mellowell get a three bagger. He was tight the rest of the game however and but five hits were gotten off him, with 12 strikeouts. Mineer of Dunbar was touched for nine hits and had but six strikeouts, sending only half the number that Swope did back to the bench.

Next week Wheeler will have a festival after a game on the home grounds, the benefits of which will go towards buying supplies for the nine. The team has been playing good ball, having some fast men in the lineup.

The festival will be held for three successive days, and Trotter, Dunbar and the Connellsville Independents have been secured as attractions for these three evenings. The festival will be held Thursday, Friday and Saturday of next week.

School Board Meeting.

The school board of Lower Tyrone township will meet at the Hollitown school house on Saturday, July 24, 1915, to elect teachers, and receive bids for fuel, supplies, etc.—Adv.

ABOUT SKIDDING

Motorists Should Know What to Do: Tires Important.

Many a motorist has had his car brought to a halt against a telephone pole or skidded into a ditch because he has not taken the necessary precaution before he ventured out on the road. In other words, not learning just what to do in case his wheels started to skid.

Speeding is dangerous, carelessness causes many accidents, but there is no question but that more serious accidents occur because of skids on muddy roads or slimy pavements than for any other reason.

The fundamental principle which should be remembered, is that the wheels should be kept straight. When the rear end of the car begins to slide, the front and rear wheels no longer track, and it is impossible for the tires to grip. The moment the driver feels the sickening slide begin he should twist the steering wheel quickly and bring the front and back wheels in alignment. The tires will get a grip on the road and, in most cases, skidding can be prevented.

Once a skid is started it is impossible for the best and most experienced driver to stop it. On roads which are slippery, the motorist should either have chains on or a very good anti-skid tire. In cities where the streets are continually sprinkled, the motorist should always have his rear wheels at least equipped with anti-skids.

Some anti-skid tires are much more effective than others in preventing skidding—that is, some grip the road much harder and more quickly than others in case of an emergency. For example, the Squeegee Bars on Diamond Tires are especially effective—the outside bar wipes away the mud as the side movement begins, and permits the other bars to grip a hard, smooth surface and hold.

There are times when chains should be used, but under ordinary circumstances anti-skid tires are a sufficient protection.

In no case, however, should a motorist drive with others in his car unless he is prepared for every emergency.

MARGUERITE WINS

Takes Interesting Game From Hostetter by Two Run Margin.

Marguerite again pulled the wool over Hostetter in a game Wednesday evening when that team was defeated 5-3. Hostetter led until the sixth inning when the score was tied and in the following inning Marguerite pushed one across following with another in the ninth.

Good fielding on the part of Hostetter held down the score as the Marguerite boys were slamming the ball hard. The batting and fielding of Dulick were the features of the game.

"You can't get away from the law of averages, any more than you can escape the first of the month."
—Mister Squeegee

Now and then even a tail-end baseball team will play a wonderful game.

The pitcher will have everything on the ball, everybody will bat well and field faultlessly, and luck will break right all the way.

But the good games that come once or twice a month are not the ones on which the standing of the cellar champions is figured.

The team that stays up in the first division must play well day after day.

So it is with tires. Their excellence is not based on the extraordinary mileage that the occasional one gives.

It is the general average of service that must be considered in estimating tire values.

Diamond Squeegee Tread Tires are in favor, not because of the performance of an occasional one, but because of the superior merits of more than 99% of them.

MINES TO CLOSE

Will Shut Down Tomorrow in Honor of Dr. Joseph A. Holmes.

More than two-thirds of the coal mines of West Virginia will suspend operations tomorrow in respect to Dr. Joseph A. Holmes, former director of the United States Bureau of Mines, whose funeral will be held in the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Covenant, Washington. This announcement was made by officials of the West Virginia-Pittsburg Coal Company, which has offices in Pittsburg. Three mines of this company, in which 600 men are employed, will be shut down all day. Officials of various other coal and coke companies said that similar action may be decided on by them. Most Pennsylvania mines will be closed for an hour or two at least, they believed, as a tribute of respect to the "father of the United States Bureau of Mines." Dr. Holmes died from tuberculosis in Denver.

The Pittsburg experiment station of the United States Bureau of Mines at Pittsburg, will be shut down tomorrow morning. Officials said that other bureaus of this department in Washington will also be closed as a mark of respect.
